Parrots are brilliantly feathered and clever in the use of their beaks and claws. Each bird has a large and arched upper beak. It has two toes pointing forward and two backwards. Some parrots have the power of mimicking speech and can be trained to speak a few words. Parrots are skilful climbers but clumsy walkers. In the wild, they usually nest in hollow trees. They live long, some living beyond fifty years.

One species parrots, the African parrots called 'lovebirds', are tiny in size. They get their name from the affection they show to birds of their kind. These are often kept as pets. Another species, the Kea, from New Zealand, attacks and kills sheep. They do so by thrusting their powerful beaks into the fat which surrounds the kidneys.

In many bird parks and zoos, parrots have been trained to perform numerous acts. These shows have helped to draw great crowds to the parks and zoos. With each visit, an admission charge is levied. The proceeds go towards the upkeep of these birds and animals.
